12 LAND MATTERS

FOREGROUND

18 NOW

In a national competition, two student teams win with ways to revive national parks; the Supreme Court picks up a case that involves runoff from logging roads; a new report favors "natural" solutions for resisting disasters; Milwaukee considers stormwater permits along watershed lines rather than town lines; and a new study looks at the benefits of white roofs versus those of green roofs in arid areas.

EDITED BY LINDA McINTYRE

30 SPECIES

Our very own necrophiliac insect, the American burying beetle, is being perilously pushed around in its habitat. Plus: You know the plant John Tradescant the younger brought home to England from Virginia, whether you know that you know or not.

36 HOUSE CALL

Choice Cuts

It's kind of a farm and kind of a garden that Stephen Stimson, FASLA, laid around a modern vernacular house outside Boston, and it slices perfectly into its site.

FEATURE

54 THIS WAY, SHANGHAI

The Gubei Pedestrian Promenade in Shanghai almost became another chunky, second-rate public space. SWA turned all that around.

BY MARY G. PADUA, ASLA

THE BACK

68 THE 100-YEAR HAIRCUT

A quarter-mile-long allée to the ocean created in 1913 by Arthur Shurcliff in Ipswich, Massachusetts, was due for a serious trim.
